NIKKO AM GROWTH STRATEGY

Assets are held in the Nikko AM Wholesale NZ Growth Fund. The Nikko AM Growth Fund (retail) and Nikko AM KiwiSaver Scheme Growth Fund invest in units in the wholesale fund, which the commentary refers to.

Market Overview

- Financial markets began 2023 with a significant uplift in value, and investors across a wide range of sectors in property, equities and fixed income markets saw their asset values rise.
- Whilst it is quite likely that volatility in markets will likely be a continuing feature in coming months, it is pleasing that this may be signaling that the markets have found their 'floor' and looking for reasons to consolidate in anticipation of future gains.

Fund Highlights

- Every sector of the Fund posted positive returns in January
- All underlying funds, with the exception of the global shares sector, outperformed their respective benchmarks. The ARK fund was the standout performer for the month with a return of over 23% albeit this is off a low base following sharp declines in 2022.
- Equity markets were up 4-5% on average in NZ dollar terms, and investors who hedged their foreign currency exposure further enhanced those gains being protected from the strengthening NZ dollar. Similarly bond markets around the world rallied as interest rates came off their highs in anticipation that central banks may have done enough to deal with the inflation issues.

Market Commentary

Financial markets began 2023 with a significant uplift in value, and investors across a wide range of sectors in property, equities and fixed income markets saw their asset values rise. The reasons for this are many and varied as is often the case in the financial world, but one key element would be the sense that the interest hiking process is nearing the end and that investors believe that as interest rates stabilise at these levels, valuations across all sectors will stabilise too resulting in more certainty and confidence. However, it is much too early to call an end to the repair process, and whilst we agree that the end of central bank tightening may be close, there are still a number of factors which would lead us to conclude that we are some ways from the start of a new bull market. Whilst it is quite likely that volatility in markets will likely be a continuing feature in coming months, it is pleasing that this may be signalling that the markets have found their ‘floor’ and looking for reasons to consolidate in anticipation of future gains. Underlying issues around a shortage of labour globally, questions over money supply (especially in the US), geopolitical tensions/war, and stubborn inflation have not disappeared, but as the world continues to open up from the border closures and industry shutdowns, the demand/supply imbalance will slowly improve and both individuals and corporates will re-tune themselves to this higher price, higher interest rate world.

Fund Commentary

Every sector of the Fund posted positive returns in January, and with the exception of the global shares sector, all underlying funds outperformed their respective benchmarks. The ARK fund was the standout performer for the month with a return of over 23% albeit this is off a low base following sharp declines in 2022. Equity markets were up 4-5% on average in NZ dollar terms, and investors who hedged their foreign currency exposure further enhanced those gains being protected from the strengthening NZ dollar. Similarly bond markets around the world rallied as interest rates came off their highs in anticipation that central banks may have done enough to deal with the inflation issues. Our alternative strategies contributed positively to performance with the Option Fund returning over 5% after a difficult period, and the Multi-Strategy fund continues to perform the role it’s employed to do in protecting on the down side and participating healthily in the upside so as to smooth overall volatility in the Fund. Not holding cash in the Fund has been a material headwind as markets fell, but in these upswings the Fund benefits from its longer-term positioning.
