Market Commentary

Markets continued the recent trend of weakness over the month of October, with interest rates continuing their march higher. The US 10-year bond yield breached the 5% mark for the first time since before the GFC as strong economic data over the third quarter suggested the higher short term interest rates had not yet impacted aggregate spending. The tragic events in Israel/Gaza heightened geopolitical uncertainty and global equity markets remained volatile and sold off later in the month to post a third straight monthly decline. The MSCI ACWI Index was down nearly 3% in local currency terms, but with the NZD falling nearly as much the index was slightly positive in NZD (unhedged) terms. The Bloomberg Global Aggregate Index (hedged to NZD) returned -0.75% for the month.

One of the key drivers of higher interest rates over recent months has been the resilience of economic data, and therefore the expectations of the 'higher rates for longer' scenario playing out. In the US the 3rd quarter GDP report (+4.9% QoQ annualised) was the strongest print since late 2021 when the economy was rebounding sharply out of the Covid-induced troughs. The US Fed has hiked rates more than 5% and this is expected to eventually slow down business investment and household spending in the world's largest economy, but this has not yet been the case. European economic growth was much more subdued and the third quarter print there was slightly negative. In positive news for Europe, inflation has fallen back below 3% YoY with the sharp drop in energy prices being the main contributor. This should allow the European Central Bank to pause their rate hiking cycle.

Corporate earnings season kicked off in October with company reports for the third quarter generally exceeding expectations, offering support to equity markets. Earnings growth was especially strong within technology, particularly in the semiconductor and software sectors. The Utilities sector posted the strongest performance over the month. Utilities have been one of the weakest sectors over the last year with their defensive characteristics and high dividend yield underperforming in a rising rate environment.

Fund Commentary

The fund performance was disappointing in absolute and relative terms over October with both equities and bond markets continuing their recent trend of weakness. The ARK portfolio was down more than the broader equity market with Tesla, Roku and Zoom, the 3 largest holdings in the portfolio, all down over the month. The global shares portfolio underperformed the broader market by more than 1% with UK pest control company Rentokil the largest detractor following a poorly received third quarter earnings report. US consumer credit reporting company TransUnion was also weak as was luggage company Samsonite International. Microsoft, Netflix and Progressive all performed well on the back of their solid quarterly earnings reports. NZ equities were down nearly 5% for the month, underperforming the broader global market. In relative terms the Core Fund and Concentrated Fund both outperformed the NZX Index with underweight positions to property companies - Property for Industries and Kiwi Property contributing. NZ bonds and global bonds both posted negative returns with interest rates higher over October, particularly at the long end of the curve. Credit holdings have performed better than lower yielding government bonds on a sector basis with margins stable to slightly narrower. The NZ dollar depreciated by around 3% versus the US Dollar over the month in line with risk-off sentiment and a stronger US dollar. The Kiwi has now fallen nearly 9% since mid-July when it traded just under US$0.64.
